DA Provides List of Victim Resources Available During COVID-19 Pandemic

Comprehensive List Includes Support for Families, DV and Human Trafficking Survivors

While San Diego County residents continue to remain at home to prevent the spread of the coronavirus, there are still a wide range of services available to crime victims, survivors and families experiencing violence, mental health issues or homelessness. District Attorney Summer Stephan’s office is providing a comprehensive list of a range of organizations still providing services online.

“We want the public to know that there are resources still available for vulnerable populations even when everything may seem closed,” DA Stephan said. “Now is the time for the community to come together to help one another and to remind bad actors that there are consequences for abusing, scamming or victimizing anyone in our neighborhoods.”

The list has been published here on the DA’s public website.

The District Attorney’s Office is concerned that stay-at-home order may result in an increase in domestic violence. If you or someone you know is in danger, call the National Domestic Violence Hotline at 1-800-799-7233. There is also an online chat service available or you can text LOVEIS to 22522. Information is also available on the DA’s website. A new domestic violence resource website set up by the District Attorney’s Office provides information in English and Spanish on free local services, along with an anonymous quiz that determines one’s risk for domestic violence.

Anyone in immediate danger should call 911.
